National Wildlife Refuges

Imagine a land inhabited by great herds of caribou, majestic polar bears, Dall sheep, moose, and wolves. Imagine a host of chattering sea birds, vast flocks of waterfowl, and rivers teeming with fish. Place them in an equally breathtaking landscape, amid vast stretches of towering mountains, rolling tundra, and a myriad of coastal islands. Beyond imagination is the real thing – Alaska’s National Wildlife Refuges – waiting for you to explore.

Alaska refuges are some of the wildest places on earth, ranging in size from the 303,094 acre Izembek Refuge at the end of the Alaska Peninsula, to the 19.6 million acre Arctic Refuge stretching from the Brooks Range to the Arctic Ocean.

USFWS

The Friends group is dedicated to conserving the natural resources of Alaska’s 16 National Wildlife Refuges.

We are an independent, 501(c)3 non-profit, volunteer organization.

- We educate the public and decision makers about Alaska’s National Wildlife Refuges.
- We assist refuges in accomplishing their mission through wildlife management and habitat improvement projects.
- We cosponsor the annual Kachemak Bay Shorebird Festival with the Alaska Maritime National Wildlife Refuge. For more information visit www.kachemakshorebird.org.

Experience Alaska’s Refuges through education, service, and advocacy.

As a Friends member, you can volunteer for education, outreach, advocacy, biology and maintenance projects happening around the state. Apply on our website- www.alaskarefugefriends.org.

Members gather via videoconference or in person to learn and share. The meetings may feature refuge staff, a science presentation, or member field report.

Friends partner with refuges throughout Alaska to sponsor birding outings, wildlife viewing events, film festivals, and education activities.
